

Dashboard Napkin Drawings and Feedback

The first version of our dashboard napkin drawing had some differences from our initial visualizations where we decided that we didn't want to have a lot of scatterplots because it looked very busy.

The napkin drawing was sent to Tavianne Kemp and Kripanjali Dhungana for feedback on how it can be improved. Tavianne confirmed that we were going to do a T test to confirm our results so that the dashboard would be accurate. Overall, she thought the dashboard looked good and had two suggestions. Her suggestions were to include some text introducing our data topic along with who our audience is and our project goal. Kripanjali liked our usage of different charts but suggested to perform the correlation matrix but use a heat-map to represent it instead of putting the matrix up. She also suggested we put a trend line on the graph that answers #9. We went back and updated the napkin drawing after the feedback and think the layout looks much cleaner and streamlined.
